

Edmunds and the Treaty.

Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, who has given some attention to the arbitration treaty between England and the United States, and who is an authority on such questions, thinks the objections which have been brought against it are of very little weight. The Monroe doctrine is not affected by the treaty, he believes, nor are our relations to the Nicaragua Canal endangered by it. In regard to the imagined peril to us in this power of a European to name an umpire in settlement of disputes in certain contingencies, he remarks very truly that "so far as our considerable experience goes we have never had occasion to complain of any sovereign in naming an umpire or in deciding a controversy."

The three chief points of criticism against the treaty are thus dealt with. When submitted to intelligent, unbiased examination, that is to say, the objections to it are found to be not formidable. Of course, some of the objects are against the treaty because Cleveland favors it, and upon these the ex-Senator's arguments will have no effect. Happily this obstructive element is small. It comprises part of the silver Democratic lobbies whose hands are against everything which the President wants, and for everything which he opposes. Necessarily this faction cannot cast many votes. No support will be given to it from the Republican side.

It is entirely safe to say that by the vast majority of the Senators the treaty will be considered solely on its merits, without any regard for its party, or for the particular individuals or element to whom its ratification would bring glory. In a matter affecting our relations with the rest of the world there should be no partisanship or petty factional prejudice. This is especially imperative in dealing with a question affecting the peace of the country with the nation with which we are brought in closest contact, and involving an agreement which would be a memorable triumph of civilization. The Senate will give the treaty the careful consideration which its importance demands, and will be guided in its action by the duty which it owes to the country and to humanity.—Globe-Democrat.
